Course Description	Cap (registrant capacity): 25 students The globalization of national security, economy, society, culture, and politics has altered the traditional ways international relations have been conducted and studied. As more actors have acted globally and more issues have transnational causes and effects, studying international relations is both exciting and challenging at the same time. Understanding international relations also has become an essential requirement not only for politicians and scholars but also for citizens living in the age of globalization. The course will introduce the studies of international relations and help the students make some sense of the complicated reality of today's world. It will begin with (i) major concepts and theoretical frameworks of international relations, with which the students can analyze specific issues and cases featured in the later parts of the course, then proceed to (ii) the studies of international security featuring such issues as war, terrorism, nuclear weapons, arms control, and PKOs, and conclude with (iii) the studies of international political economy, including international trade and finance, regional integration, development, environment, immigration, media, and culture.
Class plan based on course evaluation from previous academic year	The students demonstrated better learning results and strong engagement in class debates in the previous academic year. This year, more class time will be spent on class debates so that the audience/judge students have time to ask questions to the debating students.
Course related to the instructor's practical experience (Summary of experience)	Not applicable
Learning Goals	Students in this course will (i) develop an understanding of and interest in the major issues of international relations (ii) be familiar with major theoretical frameworks of International Relations, (iii) understand the history of modern diplomacy, (iv) the significance of regional economic and security institutions, (v) be able to develop and express, in both oral and written form, their own opinion on, analysis of, and possible solutions for major issues in international relations based on political science theories and credible sources of information. (vi) respect cultural, national, and social diversities and collaborate with individuals with different backgrounds.

Active Learning Methods	Discussion, Debate/Group Work
More details/supplemental information on Active Learning Methods	The course requirements include class discussions on reading assignments and group debates on the major topics of current issues.
Use of ICT	The course will use a learning management system, UNIPA, to receive course materials, to submit assignments, to view scores of and comments on submitted assignments, to contact the instructors and other students, to engage in group works, to view the attendance records, and more. To ensure access to course materials and the full functions of UNIPA, students should use a laptop, or tablet computer, not a smartphone. The use of electronic devices may be restricted in case the instructor finds that the students are not engaging in class.
Contents of class preparation and review	Outside class sessions, the students are required to finish reading assignments, take open-book quizzes, prepare for the debates, to write the theory and the issue papers. After submission of the theory paper, the student will have an individual meeting with the instructor to receive feedback and discuss the topic for the issue paper.	Hours expected to be spent preparing for class (hours per week)	3 hours	Hours expected to be spent on class review (hours per week)	2 hours
Feedback Methods	Grading and feedback on assignments will be primarily done on UNIPA. Upon request, the instructor will be available for additional comments and discussion through e-mail exchanges or during regular office hours. Please make an appointment for consultation outside office hours.
